

#143 WRITE A STORY TO GO WITH THIS TITLE:

 thelifeofmine3.wordpress.com/2024/03/12/13-write-a-story-to-go-with-this-title/

March 13, 2024

TITLE: BOYFRIEND WITHOUT FLAWS

A situation unfolded in the life of one of my friends, and it's something I feel compelled to share as a conversation. It left me inspired, and I continue to emphasize the importance of being aware of certain aspects in relationships, especially for girls.

Shalo: Hey, I heard the news that you got committed. Congratulations!

Friend: Sorry for not informing you earlier.

Shalo: Oh, no problem at all. So, how's your boyfriend?

Friend: Yeah, he's pretty handsome and treats me well. I'm happy.

Shalo: That's great to hear.

Friend: Thank you again.

Shalo: Can I ask you something personal, or if you feel it's unnecessary, feel free to skip?

Friend: Hey, it's not fair. You're my friend; you can ask anything. Nothing is too personal.

Shalo: Have you compared your ex with your current boyfriend? It's unfair, but girls do that, right?

Friend: Absolutely, not comparing, but the joy I felt in both relationships is different.

Shalo: How do you differentiate them?

Friend: With my ex, I was addicted, possessive, accepting everything, even insults. If I look back, I don't know if he loved me or just flirted.

Shalo: Seriously? I thought you two were a happy and ideal couple.

Friend: Even I thought so, but giving one-sided affection, love and care is not possible in a relationship, right?

Shalo: Are you still in touch with him?

Friend: Yeah, as a stranger. I like to see how stupid I was and how I've changed.

Shalo: Whose fault was it?

Friend: It's mine. My expectations were high, and I ignored the hints he gave that it won't work.

Shalo: Have you ever missed that relationship?

Friend: No, because if I did, I couldn't be happy with my partner right!.

Shalo: How does your new boyfriend treat you?

Friend: "He treats me like I treated my ex, but I'll never be like my ex treated me".

Shalo: That's deep. You not only call him your boyfriend but also your partner.

Friend: Smiling Can I ask you something now?

Shalo: Sure!

Friend: Who is a flawless boyfriend according to you? One who has some bad habits but is genuine with girls or one who doesn't have any bad habits but has weaknesses with girls.

Shalo: Obviously, the second one who doesn't have bad habits. We could change him once he gets into a serious relationship, right?

Friend: Yeah, you're right. That was the main difference between my ex and my partner.

Shalo: So, your partner would drink and smoke?

Friend: Yeah, he would, sometimes quite a bit. But now, he's controlling it and focusing on other things. He takes care of his physique but occasionally indulges.

Shalo: That's good, but it's still detrimental to health. How do you compare your ex and your partner then?

Friend: My ex didn't smoke or drink, but he flirted with a lot of girls, even in front of me. He considered me as a friend, not even mentioning me as his girl to others. In the relationship, he wasn't worth it. But my current partner, despite occasionally smoking and drinking, always projects me as his girl with everybody. Every girl expects that, right?

Shalo: Yeah, truly. But I still can't accept drinking and smoking.

Friend: Of course, you shouldn't. But in comparison, we can control it through fights, love, and diversion. However, having a weakness for other women might lead to sharing or losing our identity, right?

Shalo: That's sensible and right. Similarly, if he doesn't stop drinking and smoking in the future, it may also affect our future and family, right?

Friend: Of course, it will. Just like if he has any affairs and shares my place with others, it also affects the future and family. Every man in a relationship has unique flaws, but we have to decide which can be changed and if that person is really worth our love and care. Otherwise, it might lead us to disaster. I can't share my man sharing my place with other girls, but we can help each other divert ourselves, which affects each other's lives. My previous relationship taught me this lesson.

Shalo: Yeah, you're right. I'm so happy for you and your decision.

Friend: Yeah, thank you! I had a great time and loved having this conversation with you. To be a surprise, I want to invite you to my marriage.

Shalo: Really? Hugging each other. So happy, dear. Ah, now I guess what you meant about "my partner" winking.

Friend: With a big smile Sure, you have to come. All our friends are coming, and we'll be expecting you. I've said a lot about you to him, and he wants to meet you. Without any excuses, you should come. Hands over the invitation Shalo: Yeah, sure. Love you, dear. My prayers will be with you both.

Friend: One more thing, as I said about my ex, it's not projecting that he is a bad person. In a relationship, we both failed, except that he is perfect in his own way. He might find a girl who can accept him as he is, and her love might fulfill him without going or having fun with other girls, which I failed to provide.

Shalo: Yeah, you are right. Even he deserves love. Prayers for him.

(It was a real-life situation that I don't want to disclose the names of the people involved. This experience significantly changed my perspective on relationships with partners. I started observing men's behavior with these two perspectives. Honestly, I've seen 2-3 people from very close surroundings, even among my cousins. One had no bad habits but had a slight weakness with girls, and the other had some bad habits but wasn't bothered by any other girls. It's really amusing.

While the conversation was about girls, I mentioned men's behavior towards girls' psychology. Even girls have a lot of flaws and bad habits that men might discuss. So, there is no perfect human; we have to decide "which is good, which we can handle, and which is worth suffering for.")